In the annals of organized crime and biker culture, the name Bernie Guindon looms large. As the founding president of the notorious Satan's Choice Motorcycle Club, Guindon left an indelible mark on the criminal underworld and society at large.

Born in Montreal, Canada in 1937, Guindon's early life was marked by poverty and a lack of parental guidance. He found solace and a sense of belonging in motorcycle clubs, eventually forming the Satan's Choice in 1965.

The Satan's Choice quickly rose to prominence in the criminal underworld, engaging in a wide range of illegal activities, including drug trafficking, extortion, and violence. Guindon, with his charismatic personality and ruthless leadership style, became a feared and respected figure.

Under Guindon's leadership, the Satan's Choice expanded its reach across Canada, establishing chapters in major cities and becoming one of the most powerful motorcycle clubs in the country.

Guindon's Arrest and the Decline of the Satan's Choice

In 1984, Guindon was arrested and charged with a litany of crimes, including murder and drug trafficking. The trial that followed was one of the most publicized and controversial in Canadian history.

Despite strong evidence against him, Guindon was acquitted of all charges. However, the damage to his reputation and the Satan's Choice was irreparable.

In the years that followed, the Satan's Choice was weakened by internal conflicts and law enforcement pressure. Guindon himself remained a recluse, living a quiet life in the countryside.

Guindon's story serves as a cautionary tale about the dangers of organized crime and the consequences of unchecked power. His legacy continues to fascinate and intrigue, shedding light on a hidden world of violence, greed, and redemption.
