Are you a college student struggling to keep up with the ever-changing slang? Or a parent trying to understand what your college-aged child is talking about? This comprehensive guide to college slang will help you decipher the secret language of higher education.

Why College Students Use Slang

There are a few reasons why college students use slang. First, it's a way to bond with their peers. Using slang shows that you're part of the in-crowd and that you understand the culture of college life. Second, slang can be a way to express oneself creatively. College students often come up with new and innovative ways to say things, and slang allows them to do that.

Types of College Slang

There are many different types of college slang, but some of the most common include:

- Academic slang: This type of slang is used to describe academic concepts and activities. For example, "cramming" means to study for a test at the last minute, and "profs" are professors.
- Social slang: This type of slang is used to describe social activities and relationships. For example, "hooking up" means to have casual sex, and "bae" is a term of endearment for a boyfriend or girlfriend.
- Technological slang: This type of slang is used to describe technology and the internet. For example, "Netflix and chill" means to watch Netflix and have sex, and "FOMO" means fear of missing out.
